WHAT IS GLOBAL WARMING?

Scientists don't really know why the weather is changing: there are more floods and tornados and there are higher temperatures than a few years ago. Some of them think it is a natural thing. Others think that people are responsible because of deforestation, and because we pollute the air.

Global warming also means that many animals for example polar bears in the Arctic, will have problems finding food. If this happens, they will die and eventually disappear.

Scientists believe that it will get hotter each year and the ice at the Poles will melt. If this happens, some islands will disappear. It will rain less in some places, so deserts will get bigger. In other places it will rain more often and harder and it won't be safe to live in valleys near rivers or near oceans any more.
